PLAINTIFFS' MOTION TO EXCLUDE CHARLES CROSBY UNDER RULE 702 AND DAUBERT

I. INTRODUCTION

Rough Country ("RC") paid Charles Crosby's employer, Exponent Inc., over $220,000 for a test that did not properly document its results.¹

As the Court has already seen,² Exponent's crash test significantly skewed the results in RC's favor. In addition to using flawed inputs and confounding variables, Mr. Crosby's crash test procedure contained several flaws. The experts in this case disagree about the precise number of inches the Exponent test "missed" by (although they all agree that the test did "miss").³ The only reason the expert dispute exists is that Mr. Crosby did not use a marker pin or similar procedure to allow for an indisputable, authoritative measurement. Mr. Crosby concedes that at least one crash test procedure requires inserting a “marker pin” so that researchers can confirm whether the amount of offset was correct.⁴ Mr. Crosby also conceded the reason he did not use the procedure that required a marker pin was because RC didn’t ask him to use it.⁵ At his deposition, he claimed there were other offset crash test procedures that allowed researchers to just “eyeball” the amount of offset to see if it was correct.⁶ But neither Mr. Crosby nor Rough Country have produced any such procedure.

It is Rough Country’s burden to demonstrate that its expert’s methodology is reliable. The Court’s exclusion of expert testimony will be affirmed absent an abuse of discretion or a “manifest” error. Daubert, 509 U.S. at 597; Chapman v. Procter & Gamble Distrib., LLC, 766 F.3d 1296, 1308 (11th Cir. 2014). RC has failed to meet its burden that “eyeballing” the amount of offset is a reliable methodology.

Because RC and Mr. Crosby decided not to accurately record the offset, Plaintiffs’ experts have resorted to using other methods to measure it. One of those is by using images taken from the overhead cameras of the crash test. According to Mr. Crosby, videos can be set up to take measurements,⁷ but Mr. Crosby did not follow the procedure to do so.⁸ Again, he did not follow that procedure, because RC asked him not to.⁹ Now, RC says the camera was misaligned,¹⁰ and it criticizes Plaintiffs' experts for using Mr. Crosby's images to make the measurements RC decided not to record.

In other words, Mr. Crosby's team failed to document the amount of offset, and then misaligned the overhead camera, which RC says renders the images from it useless to measure offset. Mr. Crosby's failure to follow established crash test procedures created a big mess, and it makes his work unreliable and inadmissible.

RC designated Mr. Crosby solely to testify about the crash test, and he has no expert opinions unrelated to the test. His testimony has no relevance and could not fit the facts of this case without the crash test. See Fed. R. Evid. 401, 402, 403, 702(a). Because Mr. Crosby's testimony pertains solely to Exponent's unreliable and inadmissible crash test, Plaintiffs respectfully request the Court exclude him from testifying at trial.
